To WhomIt May Concern,

I totally understand that there are crimes , that if committed, may and should prevent a person from obtaining various professional licenses. However, the listed crimes should be as small as possible and those listed should be based on research.

The proposed regulations do not appear to uphold the spirit or the intent of the licensure reform bill that has bipartisan support, as well as the support of the professions addressed in the proposed regulations, including nursing organizations . I do realize that there is an appeal process....but for the appeal, the person has to do all of the study then apply for an exception. That is very costly and most would not be able to afford the time or cost to complete their studies then apoeal in the hopes they might get to be licensed.

I am writing to ask that the proposed regulations preventing licensure be reworked..both the lists of crimes preventing a person from licensure as well as the time between the committed crime and the application for licensure.I am also asking that an appeal process be established..where a person could appeal before they even begin their studies .

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely ,
Theresa Alberici
