I just read with shock the proposed changes to PA law that will, in practice, end responsible dog breeding in Pennsylvania. I could not believe some of the requirements, such as daily disinfectant of all bowls, required sizes of dog houses (never mind the fact that a house of the required size would not even serve to keep a dog warm), and the mountainous paperwork required. My animals are kept in my home and anyone who knows us can attest they are well cared for; however, I can't imagine asking my husband to fill out paperwork documenting the exact times each time he takes a dog out to use the bathroom. If anything, these changes will be detrimental to animal care - taking time away from interacting with them to perform outrageous and unnecessary administrative "duties". I can only hope that these anti-common sense requirements are seen for the anti-breeder attack that they are and fail, and that such horrible legislation does not infect my state. I will think carefully before entering shows in PA in the future!
