Re: New dog laws

I am very upset, as a small breeder, at the requirements you are now making. It is one thing to meet the requirements of today and then have them changed on you. I would like to know who is going to interpret the laws when they come to check your kennel.

I have a small operation and raise my pups in my home, socializing them and making sure of their cleanliness and health. I probably will not meet your requirements. The people breeding a few litters a year and maintaining their quality are going to be the ones affected. The puppy mills sell enough dogs and make enough profit to keep up with your changes and meet your requirements.

It will always be the small breeder that feels the effects of your laws as they do not have the quantity to realize profits to keep up with your ridiculous ideas. Regardless of your law changes we will always have the abuse and puppy mills, as they always find ways to survive and profit.

I am totally against your dog law changes and hope you will see the light.

Sincerely,

Linda L. Overly
