Subject: Puppy Mills

Dear Sir,

First I applaud Pennsylvania for its efforts to regulate puppy mills. My husband and I have onlt rescued animals in our home. I have had relatives purchase purbreds with genetic disorders. They have caused much heartache as you already love the dog with your whole heart by the time you find out it is defective.

I would recommend that any board overseeing kennels and breeders have members who belong to humane societies or other rescue groups. These people are experienced in hearing excuses but are also the ones who deal with the results of puppy mills.

Likewise, any rescue group or kennel should receive special consideration in so far that at any given time their limits may be stretched. They are trying to save animals and sometimes get large numbers at one time.

Thanks for your consideration.
