INDEPENDENT REGULATORY REVIEW COMMISSION

I am opposed to students having to take the GCA to graduate from high school. This just throws another obstacle in the way of children trying to get their high school diploma, allowing them to get a decent job and have a chance in life.

The government has put "no child left behind" in place, which supposedly, through continuous testing, is checking to see that graduating seniors have been educated adequately.

Anyone in favor of this testing should just spend some time in a high school to see how hard these students work to get their diploma.
