Subject: PA. ACT 19 - Promises broken

Frankly I am appalled at the compromise all of you are making. What is so hard about a simple promise - no wire floors? There are no additional words in there implying partial wire is OK. No wire means just that; solid flooring is necessary. Also, exercise is essential. It's not difficult nor is it expensive to build outside runs. All this jargon is just a huge compromise negating your promises to protect PA's dogs.

I rescued two puppy mill breeder dogs. Not only did they, and one still does, have numerous health issue but their feet are so tender to the touch that I can't even dry their front feet with a soft cloth.

Are you people so wrapped up in your little political power world that you have no feeling left for creatures who can't defend themselves? Apparently "We the People" has also lost it's meaning, at least in Penna. I'm sorry I live in the puppy mill capital of the east coast. But I had some hope that things were changing with the new laws. Foolish me. I should have realized no one in any political capacity can keep a promise.

For myself, I have spread the word on puppy mills, Lancaster and urged friends and relatives to avoid all that smacks of that county. Even my nieces refuse to visit Dutch Wonderland any more as the "bad people" live there.

Can't you try being caring human beings? A promise is a promise. It's what we teach our children. Apparently as adults we no longer need to keep them.

Sincerely,
Sharon Binnig
