Subject: Outside wood boiler restrictions

2009 OCT 26 PM 4:24

INDEPENDENT REGULATORY REVIEW COMMISSION

Sirs or madame,

I need to voice my opinion against the state regulation on wood burning external boilers. The use of these boilers in rural areas present no problems, only in metropolitan areas could problems arise. Therefore their regulation is a local matter and should stay as such. I see this state regulation as nothing more than a ploy by the energy and oil companies to gain even more control disallowing our freedom to not participate in their monopoly. The loss of our freedom to heat our homes without state restrictions is a basic right. This is a local matter where it is harder for big energy to take control under the pretense of the environment or some other fear based excuse. The power resides in the people says our much abused Declaration of Independence. Our local governments are those people!

Thank you
