I've been reading your proposed regulation on OWB and think you're stealing more of my rights. Your organization certainly doesn't understand the whole concept behind OWB. They are a cheap and efficient way to heat our homes. Beyond your belief that OWB owners burn tires, railroad ties and other toxic products, it's just not true. Although the units are designed to burn most any type of fuel, we stick with the most efficient, wood and coal. As for coal, I see it's not part of your acceptable fuels. Why?
In my reading I also noticed you currently regulate indoor wood burners. Wow, what's next? What other freedoms will you take away. You make these regulations in the name of cleaner air? Are you going to regulate the thousands of diesel trucks that idle all night long? Are you going to regulate Nascar which burns millions of gallons of fuel in the name of entertainment? How about air shows? How about space launches? How about the facilities that burn tires as a fuel source? Something the DEP says is ok for the environment. Enough is enough. Leave our out door wood furnaces alone.
