Hello I'm just another supporter of MMA in Pennsylvania. It's a very awesome sport for the people who participate and watch the exciting events. Most people think MMA is just a brutal sport which is not the case. These fighters work very hard to accomplish their dreams because in the octagon all you have is yourself. I have a little experience with training with some of these people and they all are taught to respect the sport and each other. People are showing new talent every day in this sport and everyone goes in with a game plan just like you do in your line of work. Some fighters plan to do work on the ground because it could be a little safer than stand up. Anyway my point is you can't eliminate someone's game plan in MMA because everyone is different and this sport is built on different. These fighters know what they are signing up for and everyone who trains enjoys the feeling of confidence after a good work out. It would also help out the area in many ways. Thank you for reading
