I am very concerned about the common core mandate, and seriously protest its implementation. In a time when funding is limited and times are difficult financially, forcing this on school districts is detrimental to the student's family, not helpful. Forcing higher taxes to mandate an experiment is not good stewardship. School districts should have the ability to choose their own curriculum, that best suits local needs. There are many different learning styles and many different types of learning situations-- a one-shoe-fits-all approach often fits very few. Don't limit education to a narrow box, especially one that will cause additional tax burden on the student's families.
