Dear Sir/Madam,

I am writing in regards to the proposed rule change regarding continuing education. I am opposed to the rule change that would require chiropractors to take half of their credits in "live" classes. I have taken "live," in person classes, and I have taken on-line (sometimes referred to as distance learning) classes. The on-line classes are actually more difficult. The quizzes and written assignments required in the on-line classes are more challenging and force the learner to pay close attention. I spend more time on the on-line classes than I do in the live classes.

I ask you to re-consider your decision and allow chiropractors to take all of their continuing education hours in the on-line format.

Sincerely,
David Wells, D.C.
