Dear Mr. Collins,

I am writing out of great concern that there are large companies contracting doctors and not paying them unless they certify a patient. These companies also do not maintain appropriate medical records or provide continuity of care. Per my experience as well as those of my patients, these doctors often do not obtain an extensive history, ask about contraindication, do not educate the patients about medical marijuana, do not provide precautions, or other important information. Rather, these are almost certification factories. I feel they are a threat to the integrity of this program and undermine the importance of marijuana as a medical treatment. I am requesting an investigation into these companies. I would love to discuss this further if requested.

Respectfully,

MaryFrances Koester, MD
