Good Day,

As a resident of Upper Southampton for the past decade, I am concerned with the fact that PFAS / PFOS and similar "forever" compounds are in the source aquifer of residential and municipal wells utilized for drinking water.

In addition, the cost of testing for and treatment of the removal of these compounds is significant but necessary.

It is obviously apparent that lower regulatory standards need to be approved.

I would hope that individual homeowners could expect some assistance when it comes to testing and installing treatment systems. I understand that the problem is in the development and investigation phase but trust that there will be consideration for the public welfare of individual constituents of Pennsylvania when our lawmakers decide legislation on this pressing environmental issue.

Regards,
